I inherited my brother Greville's life – his desk, his business, his horses, and his enemies, and it nearly (1) _____. I was 34 at the time, walking about on crutches due to an accident I'd had while riding in a horse race at Cheltenham. (2) _____ the half-ton of horse that had stumbled over the fence after me, landing with its forefoot squarely on top of my boot, my career as a jockey (3) _____ continued just fine. Now I was (4) _____ the fact that I was going to miss (5) _____ weeks of the racing season and maybe the chance of becoming champion again. Friends encouraged me to think about the next season. (6) _____, the mid-thirties were the beginning of the end for jump jockeys and maybe my chance had gone.

I was (7) _____, when I picked up the phone and found it was not just another friend calling to say they were sorry. It was a hospital in Ipswich and a (8) _____ Greville had been involved in an accident, so I rushed there straight away. Alone in the room, on a high bed with wires and tubes all over the place and his head turned slightly, (9) _____ for visitors, my brother Greville was (10) _____ whether that intelligent, persistent, energetic man (11) _____ he was dying.

We (12) _____ together in a family unit because by the time I was born he was away at university, building a life of his own. For years Greville was a semi-stranger (13) _____ at family gatherings. After a long birthday-and-Christmas card politeness, it was an unexpected train ride at the age of 28 that (14) _____ friends. I remember meeting him once after a particularly nasty fall in a race I had won. We had drunk champagne and laughed, and as a result he had bought his first horse. Greville absolutely refused (15) _____ a steeplechase horse because he couldn't stomach the idea I might ride it and fall to my death. I had hoped that he might realise that I could (16) _____.

Now I wished we (17) _____ more time together, but there wasn't (18) _____ I could do. (19) _____ that my problems were just beginning and that Greville hadn't simply been (20) _____ the wrong time.
